The Barre Times had a good word to say for its Italian population recently, which was both just and true. Ainslee's for October has two good Western stories in the "Manipulator," by Alberta Bancroft, and "The Maid and the Money," by Bertha M. Bowers. They are distinctly Western, not alone because the scene of each is laid in the West, but because the heroines in each are young women of energy and enterprise, with a capricious, because unconscious, spontaneity, at the same time being attractive as women. There is a freshness and wholesomeness about these stories that is needed in these days.
